Research confirms what most faculty and graduate program directors already know: many students enter their graduate programs with little understanding of the complex landscape of higher education or how different philosophies in graduate programs drive expectations for academic excellence and ideal career pathways. In fact, despite very articulate statements of purpose in their applications, many graduate students initially are unsure of what they will do with a graduate degree. This is not a problem but rather an opportunity for good mentoring. Students career goals are evolutionary and good mentors assist students with their professional evolution. Mentoring is important, not only because of the knowledge and skills students can learn from mentors but also because mentoring provides professional socialization and personal support to facilitate success in graduate school and beyond. Quality mentoring greatly enhances students chances for success. Research shows that students who experience good mentoring also have a greater chance of securing academic tenure-track positions or greater career advancement potential in administration or sectors outside the university. The Mentors also help students cope with challenges such as absentee parents, an unstable home situation, or lack of familiarity with the world outside their immediate community. By contrast, mentoring for students in college are directed toward helping them feel connected to the campus community for improved student outcomes. Mentors in Navjeevan Law College facilitate formal mentoring, pairing students with professionals and even upper-class students who share their legal interests, backgrounds, and goals. The Mentors guide and teach the students to understand and apply the law, but it does not prepare you adequately to practice law. The Mentors help the students in understanding the complex business of law includes exposure to court hearings, depositions, client meetings and mediations. This is how they learn the intricacies of the job requirements, including how to prepare for hearings and meetings, note taking and what to wear.
